In Cloud Nine, Churchill reverses the traditional immigration pattern. Often parents settle in a new land but bring the past and its old ways with them; in Cloud Nine, however, the children flee their past by returning to the old land, but they are still smothered by ancient habits, expectations, and icons. This preoccupation with the ghosts and hauntings of the past, indeed with the very nature of time itself, is further explored by Churchill in the unusual pieces Traps and Moving Clocks
